NEW YORK STYLE PIZZA— is a style of pizza which originated in “the Big Apple” in the early 1900s. New York style pizza is characterized by its wide, thin, and foldable slices. The traditional toppings were limited to tomato sauce and mozzarella cheese, with any additional toppings placed with the cheese. It is traditionally hand-tossed and light on sauce. The slices are often eaten as a 'street snack' while folded in half, as its size and flexibility sometimes makes it unwieldy to eat flat. The most notable difference between New York style and other American pizzas is its thin hand-tossed crust, made from a high-gluten bread flour.
